tleans, Bees and Duneers, When a boy I had a couple of coons of honey, and one evening made a raid on a beehive. There was a ball at the house that evening, and the young peo-ple had just become deeply interested in he lancers" when the coons and the little busy bees mixed. The battle only nated one round. The coons saw that they were outclassed and wanted to some home. They did so, and brought half a bushel of industrious bees with them. As they entered the sitting room, squalling with pain, they looked like great black balls.

The ball was a full dress affair, and by the time the coons had taken a couple of turns around the room, shedding bees at every jump, everybody-including guests hustled out of doors, only to meet the rest of the bees coming in. They had all sworn out search warrants for those coons, but were content to take substitutes. They crawled down in the corsages of the ladies and up the pantaloons legs of the gentlemen.

They swarmed on bald heads and bare ers. Fine ladies rolled on the carpet in Parisian gowns and men stood on cushioned chairs and shook their fists at heaven! Everybodý seemed possessed of a frantic desire to get out of their clothes, and all the time those miserable coons were running around under chairs and climbing over sofus, shedding bees by the handful. There was no second dance; everybody appeared to think one number enough.—St. Louis Globe-Dem-

Norsh's Two Pictures

This story is related by a Brooklyn voman: "My cook, Norah, appeared in my room the other day with a pic ture which a man at the basement door was endeavoring to sell to her. It was a large one of the 'Shanghai' species bright in color, and put up in a showy, lacquered frame. Norah explained that she was about taking up rooms for her father and mother and thought she would like a few pictures, and wanted my judgment on the wisdom of purchasing this one. As it was a pleasing combination of mountain, valley, river and ruined tower, pretty in color and restful to the eye, I told Norah I thought she could venture to take it at its price-$2.75. An hour later I had occasion to visit the kitchen. Norah's two tables were set against the wall and on each rested a picture. She saw me stop and look at them. 'I took the two for five dollars,' she volunteered. 'They were all he had left and he sold them cheaper.' "'Did you want two pictures alike,

"'Alike, is it? Alike! Are they alike? said she, as with eyes and mouth wide open she approached and gazed at them searchingly. 'And so they are the very same, and I niver noticed it at all, at all, and me looking at them all the toime this hour past. Indade he was a smart and deceivin fellow to be cheating a poor girl in the likes o' that. Niver moind,' she went on hopefully, 'I'll hang one in the front room and the ither in the back, and if I say nothin nobody else'll be any bit the wiser than I was meself." -New York Times.

A Kentucky Moving Stone

The moving stone at Lexington one of the most remarkable freaks of nature in the state of Kentucky, the great caverns alone excepted. In the rear of the grounds attached to the home of the late Governor Gilmer is a huge bowlder standing alone on the edge of a stream. Resting directly upon this bowlder is another weighing at least twenty tons. This upper bowlder rests upon a stone pinnacle not more than two feet square, and so evenly balanced that, although the slightest touch will cause it to rock to and fro, a hundred horses could not pull it from its socket. Geologists say that it must have been deposited in its present position in the time of the glacial epoch, and that the texture and composition of the bowlder argue in favor of the theory that it was transported from the Lake Superior region to its present resting place in a good field of ice long before there was a single human being on the face of the earth.-St. Louis Republic.

Propellers in the Center of the Boat. The only seagoing steam vessel that has propellers in the center of the boat instead of in the stern is named Le Louvre, and it plies between Nagaire and Paris, thus taking in its course sea, river and canal. The oldest man in England is said to be Amos Jinks, a native of Shropshire, now living at Wellingborough, Northamptonshire. The claim that he is 107 years old, it is averred, has been investigated and thoroughly verified by responsible parties. The old man is with ered and bent, his eyesight has failed and his voice is shaky, but apart from these evidences of age he is free from physical infirmity. An Early Settler Gone. Andrew Borden died October 29, 1892, at half-past three in the after-noon. He was taken sick with la grippe last December and kept gradnally failing till the end came. He was born in the town of Sharon, Scharrie county, N. Y., in 1804. and had he lived till November 10 would have been 88 years old. He was one of nature's noblemen, possessing an unselfish, sunshiny disposition that endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. When a boy he worked on the Eric canal, and first came to Michigan in 1826, walking around Lake. Michigan in 1826, walking around Lake Eric and following an Indian trail to within a few miles of where Chicago now stands. He settled in Oakland county and cast his first vote for John Quincy Adams. In the early days he was a strong abolitionist and stuck up the notice for the first abolition caucus ever held in the county. Since the war he has voted the republican ticket. After the war he sold his farm and moved to Kalamazoo, and from there to Grand Rapids, where his daughter lives and where he died.

These words come with as much force today as they did thirty years ago. How give them this chance?

Up in the northwest is a great empire waiting for young and sturdy fellows to come and develop it and "grow up with the country." All over this broad land are the young fellows, the boys that Lincoln referred to, seeking to better their condition and get on in life.

The country referred to lies along the Northern Pacific railroad. Here you can find pretty much anything you want. In Minnesota, and in the Red river valley of North Dakota, the finest of prairie lands fitted for wheat and grain, or as well for diversified farming. In Western North Dakota and Montana are stock ranges limitless in extent, clothed with the most nutritions of grasses.
